FOOTBALL AT GREAT TUGLETON.

BY GUY BOOTHBY.

Quiet as it is, no one can deny that Great Tugleton has had its excitements.

Who, among its inhabitants, will forget the day when the Squire, with a generosity that, to say the least of it, was rare in him, gave orders that the village pump should be repaired at his expense? How many there are also who can recall, with a thrill, that momentous occasion when certain irreverent boys drew what was intended to be a caricature of the Master, in chalk, upon the schoolhouse door, and how fifteen of them were soundly caned on suspicion until the real artist was discovered. Those were exciting times indeed, but their glory pales into absolute insignificance when compared with the arrival of the Curate-in-charge, the Reverend Cuthbert McFadden, and the great events that were contingent thereupon.

That warts had with CURCUMA SOAR to cleanse the skin and scalp of crusts and scales and gentle application of CURCUMA OINTMENT to instantly alay itching, irritation, and inflammation, had to be followed in the severest case by a dose of CURCUMA BALSAMIC, as all these were local remedies. The alleviation of the suffering of skin-tortured infants and children and the comfort of worn-out worried mothers has been demonstrated in countless homes in every land. Therapeutic safety, purity, and sweetness, instantaneous grateful relief, speedy cure, and great economy leave nothing more to be desired by anxious parents.

Something for Mothers to Think About

EVERY CHILD born into the world with an inherited or early developed tendency to distressing, disfiguring humours of the skin, scalp, and blood, becomes an object of the most tender solicitude, not only because of its suffering but because of the dreadful fear that the disfigurement is to be lifelong and mar its future happiness and prosperity. Hence it becomes the duty of mothers of such afflicted children to acquaint themselves with the best, the purest, and most effective treatment available.

the latter had only one pair to their names, the order was of necessity disregarded. They had, however, greased them, and in some cases had even blacked them, to be in keeping with the proprieties. Arrived at the rendezvous they formed themselves into a group, and while awaiting the coming of their instructor, indulged in the playful bairnery peculiar to natives of the Wiltshire village.

"Brist gwinne to play thee football, Churf Hodder?" a youth would enquire.

"I want I be, Zeph Higgins, Charles would reply. "I be main fit for runnin' just now."

Then the humour of the situation would dawn on one or another of them, and compel him or them to retire from the crowd in order to have the laugh out. Like the proverbial Sergeant-at-Law, the Great Tugletonians jest with difficulty.

At last the Reverend Cuthbert put in an appearance, carrying under his arm the new ball, with the aid of which he hoped to be able to implant a desire for athletic exercise in the more torpid minds of his parishioners.

Pushing his way through the little crowd, the Curate took up a position in the centre and addressed them, explaining the general principles of the game, so far as lay in his power, and exhorting them to persevere in it to the best of their ability. Then sides were formed and the real business thereupon commenced. By the time play ceased everyone had learned something of the rudiments of the game, though, if the truth must be told, that something took the form of black eyes and contusions generally. The Tugletonians had taken to the game even more seriously than their leader had hoped they would do.

The worthy old Vicar of the parish, it must be explained, was fast becoming unfit for duty—and when he ordered by his physician to winter in the south of France, the Reverend Cuthbert had taken over his duties. Now he, the Vicar of the parish, was to take over the game, though, if the truth must be told, that something took the form of black eyes and contusions generally. The Tugletonians had taken to the game even more seriously than their leader had hoped they would do.

After the first afternoon the progress made by the Tugleton men and lads was little short of marvellous. All their spare time was spent at football until those who had been the veriest tyros when the game was first introduced to the village were now versed in every rule. The more the Reverend Cuthbert thought about it—the more he flattered himself on the success he had achieved. He had at least brought athletics to Tugleton—and what greater ambition could any man desire? They would thank him for it later!

As often as weather and circumstances would permit, the Club played assiduously. Occasional disputes arose over the rules of the game, and not unfrequently they resulted in fights, but this seldom happened when the Reverend Cuthbert was present on the field. His presence acted like a restraining hand upon his flock. The pupils had improved, that vain-glorious man determined upon a bold stroke, in other words he declared that on a certain Saturday in March—all being well—there should be played such a match as had never been dreamed of by the oldest inhabitant of Great Tugleton and the neighbourhood. The competing teams were to be picked as far as possible as could be, between Married Men and Bachelors—the worthy Treasurer, who had a wife of eighteen years, captaining one side—the Reverend Cuthbert McFadden, the embodiment of Bachelordom, taking command of the other. Can it be guessed with which side popular sympathy lay? There was not a youth who walked along the dry and chalky road beside his lass on the Sunday before the all important match who did not feel that, like a knight of old, he was doing honourable service for her and for the cause of Chivalry. Small wonder, therefore, that public opinion in the village was excited.

At the time of his arrival at Great Tugleton, and with shame must it be confessed, there was not a tennis court to be found in the entire parish—there was no cricket club, and more terrible still, football was unknown. Here was the Reverend Cuthbert's opportunity and he seized it with avidity. He would revolutionise Great Tugleton, he said, or know the reason why. He did know the reason why.

The football season was somewhat advanced when the Curate took over his charge. This fact, however, only served the purpose of making him the keener to get to work. He commenced by broaching the subject to his churchwardens—both of whom received the proposition with profound disfavour. Their behaviour might possibly have discouraged meaner mortals—but our hero was built of too stern a metal to know defeat. He forthwith announced that a meeting would be held at the Vicarage on a certain Wednesday evening early, to discuss the matter, and, in due course, most of the male population of the Village put it an appearance at it.

When the door was closed, the convener of the meeting voted himself into the chair, and proceedings commenced. With much eloquence he pointed out the benefit to be derived from football. His audience heard him out with such stolid faces as I believe only the inhabitants of Great Tugleton possess. When it eventually dawned upon them what it was all about, they looked at each other in silent amazement. It was certain that very much beer would have to be consumed before a proper understanding of this matter would be arrived at. One thing was declared beyond question—Tugleton was to have a football club and their reverend pastor was to bear the expense. A list of rules was drawn up. Mr. McFadden, captain of the opposing team, however, repaired to the local tavern, the Fox and Goose, and sought inspiration from the good cheer to be found there. Though Cuthbert was not aware of it, the Bachelor Team, not being under pécific government, also spent the morning at the inn, with what result remains to be told.

There was, however, one point the Reverend Cuthbert had not lost sight of. For some days past he had been expecting the return of the Vicar and during the morning he had received a telegram from him to the effect that he and his sister would reach the village during the afternoon.

"In that case he will be in time to see the progress his parishioners have made during his absence, in one direction at least," Cabert had remarked, as he placed the message in his pocket.

But to return to my description of the now famous match.

Punctuality was one of the Reverend Cuthbert's chief characteristics; there fore exactly on the stroke of two-thirty that gentleman, having won the toss, kicked off with proper deliberation and solemnity. Then the fray commenced.

It is not my intention to attempt to describe to you the varying fortunes of the game. They would interest no one save those football enthusiasts who care not to witness a match—only to read about it. Let it suffice that, for the first half, neither side obtained any material advantage. Everyone upon the field felt that he was upon his mettle and was resolved that the results should be death or victory. In other words all were doing their best.

Now, I have not, so far, given utterance to a statement—which, look upon it how I may, has a very important bearing on the story. I have to tell. Let it therefore be stated once and for all that when the Reverend Cuthbert McFadden discoursed his sister and made his appearance on the field he was attired in the costume in which he had once competed for the honours of his college at the University. Let those who have been similarly situated endeavour to appreciate the picture. As I have already stated, the gentleman in question was not a big man. Nor, must it be confessed, was his figure, despite the manipulation of dumb-bells and Indian clubs, in any way heroic. When attired, therefore, only in a jersey and extremely short knickerbockers, his appearance was attenuated to the extreme. However, like many another man in a similar position, he felt that the eyes of the world were upon him and was therefore oblivious of the rest. He accordingly shouted his orders, dashed hither and thither, made frantic dives for the ball, as often as it was missing, encouraged his followers to greater efforts, and felt that in so exerting himself he was doing all that could reasonably be expected of him. Little by little, however, he began to have a premonition that things were not as they should be with the players. Sounds of strife were to be heard on every side, and an uneasy suspicion was beginning to cross his mind that, since the interval, his men were not only not playing up to their usual standard, they that were also growing every moment more and more querulously disposed towards each other. Sad to relate this was exactly what was taking place—and it is just possible that the landlord of the Black Goose was to blame for it. The climax was not far off.

Unimportant though the fact may seem, Jabez Mugbridge was own brother to Lot Heble's wife. He was also known to be courting Heble's sister, Tilda. Now Heble, as a married man, was on one side; Jabez, as a bachelor, was a forward on the other. Whether Lot was desirous of permitting any other member of the Mugbridge family to enter his family circle, or whether, as may be more likely, there was some other quarrel between them, I cannot say; the fact, however, remains that some tea or twelve minutes after the second half had commenced, and at the self-same moment as the worthy old Vicar and his sister turned the corner of the road in their fly, and came into view of the field, Lot invited Jabez to tell him where the policeman he was a comin' to—whereupon Jabez retaliated that he was 'gwine wut he dan well please—Lot Heble or no Lot Heble.' The result may be imagined. Lot struck Jabez and Jabez retaliated. Seeing his friend in difficulties, Bill Ribble ran to the rescue, and encountering Luke Gubbins en route hit him a violent blow upon the jaw, which came near to annihilating that worthy. Before the Reverend Cuthbert could realize the turn events had taken, the fight had become general. Sad to relate, however, it did not end there.

Among the concourse of spectators were many wives and sweethearts—who had come to enjoy the novelty of the mimic war. Seeing their husbands and lovers suddenly engaged in desperate strife, they threw prudence to the winds and dashed into the fray—hitting, scratching, and buffeting friend and foe alike. As the Reverend Cuthbert remarks to this day, it was indeed a scene to be remembered! Good gracious, Augustus! the Vicar's sister, who had the sharper eyes of the pair, 'what can be the matter?' The Vicar stood up in the carriage and looked over the hedge. 'Stop, stop,' he cried to the driver of the fly. 'Put me down. It's a riot and I must stop it.' You shall not go without me,' shrieked his sister, and followed him from the vehicle.

Picture for yourselves the heroism of that gallant pair. Unarmed save with their umbrellas they dashed into the thick of the mêlée—beating everyone who came in contact just as the fancy took them. At last the combatants, exhausted by their efforts, recognised their aged Pastor and his sister, and desisted from their strife.

'What does this mean?' cried the old gentleman, as soon as he could make himself heard. 'Have you all gone mad?'

'Bless 'ee, no!' answered the Captain of the Married side, mopping the blood that streamed upon his upper lip as he spoke. 'This be football, ha'nt it? Any rate it be good enough for I. Come on!'

'Football?' echoed the Vicar, catching him by the arm. 'Who on earth taught you football?' A strange silence fell upon the crowd. They had enjoyed their game immensely, but they did not expect to be held accountable for it.

'T'was the new Pazzon as learned it to 'ee, one of them replied.

'The new what?' New Pazzon!

'H'ere a be!' The crowd parted right and left, as the man spoke, revealing to the astonished gaze of the Vicar, a small, attenuated form, seated on the ground, clad in an entirely inadequate pair of flannel knickerbockers, by this time much the worse for wear, and a striped jersey short in the sleeve and very open at the neck. His left eye was partially closed, there was an ominous bruise on his right cheek, while a thin trickle of blood ran down his left temple.

The Vicar stared at him very much as he would have looked upon an antediluvian monstrosity, while his sister, in evident confusion, put up her umbrella to shield herself from so terrible a sight.

'Get up, sir,' said the Vicar, in his stern voice. 'Get up at once, and if you are the unhappy person they desire me to suppose—leave this field at once and hide yourself from the pitying gaze of the unfortunate people whom you have reduced to this most unhappy and shameful condition.'

To-day, the Reverend Cuthbert McFadden is labouring gallantly in the lowest quarter of a manufacturing town in the Midlands. It was suggested to him, only a few weeks ago, that he should inaugurate an Athletic Club for the benefit of his men.

Football is a splendid game for the working classes, said the Member for the district prominently. 'I should be quite willing to give you a guinea towards initial expenses. Why not start a Club this season, Mr McFadden?"

"No, thank you; his Reverence replied, sincerely but firmly. "I have had one experience of that sort, and I cannot say that I should care about another. Such an experience as mine would last any man a lifetime."

Problem No. 40.
(From the "Manchester Weekly Times")

Black (10 Pieces).

White (7 pieces).

White to play and mate in three moves.

Solution to Problem No. 39 (B. G. Laws in the British Chess Magazine):

White: 1 Q—Kt 8 R—Q 4
2 Q—Kt 6 ch K—K 4
3 Kt—Kt 6 mate
1—K—B 5
2 P—Kt 4 ch, &c.

Correct solution from C.R.T.

The challenge for the return match, by cable, between Great Britain and America has been discussed by the Committee of the British Chess Club, and the proposal to play the match under the auspices of the three leading clubs—the British, City of London, and St. George's—was entertained. It was also resolved to accept the challenge of the Dutch players for a match, and a team will be provided to meet them in London, under the condition that the return match in Holland should stand over for a more suitable date.

The Monte Carlo Tournament will commence on January 16 next. Entries should be made at once, as only a limited number will be admitted. The programme was to have been issued yesterday.

In American chess circles very great interest has been excited by a short correspondence game of 19 moves a-side, which has been recently won by Mr Franklin K. Young, of Boston, from Mr Sydney P. Johnston, the recognised champion of Chicago. The score has been most carefully examined for the Bronx Daily Eagle by Mr John F. Barry of the American Cable team; and the publication of his exhaustive comments on the play is reported to have started a discussion which appears destined to result in a thorough overhauling of the opening. Appended are the moves of the game, together with a condensation of the substance of Mr Barry's notes:

White, Mr Young. Black, Mr Johnston.
1 P—K 4 P—K 4
2 Kt—B 3 Kt—Q B 3
3 B—Kt 5 (c) Kt—B 3 (b)
4 P—Q 4 (e) Kt—K P (d)
5 P—Q 5 (e) Kt—Kt eq (f)
6 Q—K 2 (g) Kt—Q 3 (h)
7 Kt—P K—K 2 (i)
8 R—Q 3 (j) Castles
9 P—K B 4 (k) P—K B 3 (l)
10 Q—R 5 (m) P—B 4 (n)
11 Kt—Q B 3 (o) B—B 3
12 Castles P—Kt 3 (p)
13 Q—K R 3 (q) Kt—K sq
14 P—Q 6 (r) Kt—P (s)
15 K—Q 5 (t) P—B 4 (u)
16 Kt—P ch Q—Kt 6 (v)
17 B—Q 2 K—K sq (w)
18 P—B 3 P—Q 3 (x)
19 Kt—B P (y)

And Mr Johnston resigned (y).

(a) The most powerful of all chess databases. Its strength lies in the fact that Black is compelled to deploy his men in such wise as to obtain an inferior strategic front. This is directly due to the text move, which prevents the development of the Black K B at Q B 4.

(b) Students of the game should note that Murphy played, almost invariably, 3...P—Q R 3.

(c) The only correct move for White. 4 Castles is weak; Kt to Q B 3, 3 P to Q 3, or 4 P to Q B 3 is even worse.

(d) The correct play is 4 P takes P.

(e) By this seizing the topographical key White gains some positional advantage that it is doubtful if, with best play on both sides, Black can save the game.

(f) As had a move as could be found. It results in a loss of time which strategically is equivalent by the tactical loss represented by the elimination of three pieces from Black's game.

(g) White now gains the initiative, that is to say, the power to dictate Black's moves.

(h) This Knight should have gone to K B 3.

(i) Forced in order to avert the loss of the Black Queen by Kt to Q B 6 six ch.

(j) This piece is now withdrawn to its proper place in the White front.

(k) Bad. It is difficult, however, to suggest a good move for White.

(l) Advantageously occupying a post that ought to have been defended by the Black Kt.

(m) Best. If 10...P takes Kt, White mates in three moves; if 10...P to Kt 3, then 11 Kt takes Kt P, and White wins; and if 10...P to K B 3; 11 Q to Kt 6, P takes Kt; 12 Q to R 7 ch, K to B 2; 13 B to Kt 6 ch, K to B 3; 14 B to R 6, and Black must sacrifice his Queen to avert mate.

(n) Preventing 11...Kt to R 5.
(o) Forced—otherwise White would have won the K B P.
(p) Properly retiring to a post from which to continue to act against the K R P.
(q) Taking possession of the topographical key.
(r) If 14 P takes P? 15 B to B 4, ch, K to Kt 2; 16 Kt to Q 5, &c.
(s) About the worst move on the board. 13...B to Kt 2 is objectionable, but with the exception of 15...Q Kt to B 3 the least of the moves at Black's disposal.
(t) If 16...R takes Kt; then 17 P to K Kt 4; and White wins in a canter.

(u) There seems to be nothing better. One third of the Black moves have been made by this mismanaged piece; and its unsatisfactory condition have stopped the development of the Black Queen's wing.

(v) 18...P—Q 4 seems to be the only move worthy of notice.

(w) White does not trouble about winning the exchange by 19 Kt—Q 7.

(x) For if 19...Q—K 7; 20 Q R—K 1 Q moves; 21 Kt—K 7 ch, K to R 2; 19...Q—K B 2; 20 B—Q 4, Q—R; 21 Kt—K 7 ch, K—B 2; 22 Q—R P ch, etc.

The lines of attack adopted by White will not be found in any analytical treatise; and the superiority of the attack over the defense may be directly traced to the strict observance of strategie principles by the first player; and the entire disregard of these principles by his opponent.

YARROW'S SHALLOW DRAFT STEAMERS.

SHALLOWWHEEL STEAMERS have been found by experience to be the best type of vessel for shallow river navigation under many conditions of working, and of these Messrs Yarrow have built a very large number of successful examples for all parts of the world.

Vessels on this system are constructed when required, to draw as little as 10 inches.

The construction of shallow river vessels propelled on various systems has been made the specialty of Messrs.

THE BEST REMEDY FOR DIARRHOEA.

SOME years ago while at Martinsburg, S. W. Va., I was taken with cholera morbus, which was followed by diarrhoea. The doctor's medicine did no good. I was advised to get a bottle of Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy, which I did, and it cured me sound and well.—G. A. Morris, Bradbury, Pa., U.S.A. Bouquet Weather in the China Sea.

The Koko Chronicle of the 2nd November says:—The N.Y.K. steamer Hitchinomaru, from Europe, which was overdue on the voyage from Hongkong, and for the safety of which some anxiety was felt by the N.Y.K. officials on Thursday, arrived in port yesterday morning at 7.30. The vessel left Hongkong at 6 a.m. on the 25th ult. for Kobe direct. From the 27th to the 29th a heavy head wind was encountered, and the vessel pitched considerably, the crew at times being out of the water. The vessel, which had on board 9 homes and 6,750 tons of cargo, was only able during the three days to average some five or six knots per hour. We are informed, however, that no damage to the steamer or to the horses was sustained, which says a good deal for the way the vessel was handled. As stated the vessel arrived safely yesterday morning, having taken seven days on the direct run from Hongkong, which is generally accomplished by these vessels in between four and five days.

Madame Freed's Concert.

As will be noticed from an advertisement in another column, Madame Freed, whose arrival in the Colony we mentioned the other day, has arranged for her first concert to take place in St. George's Hall, on Monday evening. It is certainly very short notice, but this is unavoidable owing to the hall being booked for all the other nights of the week. The following popular musicians have kindly consented to assist in making the concert a success if it cannot fail to be, viz.:—Professor Galuzzi, Mr. E. Danenberg, Mr. L. R. Rudywald, and Mr. Grae, instrumentalists; Mrs. Fullerton, and Mrs. W. R. Lewis, C. H. P. Hay, and P. W. Goldring (soloists). To-day, Madame Freed is to sing 'Ave Maria' (Gounod) by special request at the wedding of the Austro-Hungarian Consul in the Roman Catholic Cathedral, Seats for Monday night's concert may be booked to-day and on Monday, at the Robinson Flair, Flair Company.

Ethiopian Entertainment.

Another of these splendid soon entertainments is to be given to-night at the Ethiopian Minstrel Troupe. The Troupe has already given most enjoyable entertainments of the kind gratuitously, and, as they have incurred considerable expenses in the matter of outfit, they are to have an innings to-night, when a small charge will be made to help to cover the outlay. It is hoped that there will be a crowded audience, as a specially attractive programme is to be placed on the boards.

HAIR PRESERVED AND EAUTIFIED.

The only reliable preserver and restorer of the hair is Bowland's Macassar Oil, which closely resembles the oily nature nature provides for nourishing and stimulating its growth, without which the hair becomes dry, thin and brittle.

It prevents baldness and scurf, strengthens the hair, and for children it lays a foundation of a luxuriant growth.

It is a safe, simple, safe, and children.

HONGKONG CRICKET FESTIVAL

THE A.D.C. PERFORMANCE

An entertainment of a 'variety' description was given last night by the Amateur Dramatic Club, in the City Hall, in honour of the cricketers from the Straits and Shanghai. Cricketers and their friends had had the preference in the matter of seat-hunting, and the consequence was that the cricketing element was very strongly in evidence. The theatre, it may honestly be said, was occupied in every part, the Robinson Piano Company having closed the plan a few days previously. Many people were keenly disappointed at being unable to book seats, and the desire to witness the entertainment is so great that the Club has decided that it shall be repeated on Thursday next; when, no doubt, a good number of those who were present last night will avail themselves of the opportunity to enjoy a second 'look-seer.' The audience last night included His Excellency the Governor and a party from Government House, and a full muster of naval and military officers. The bill of fare was a decided departure from the A.D.C.'s usual, but the manner in which the different items were presented and received served to show that the Club possesses talent enough to undertake any class of musical entertainment that appeals to public taste. The idea of a one-set farce followed by plantation odds and ends was just the right thing to suit the humour of last night's audience, and right well it was appreciated.

'TRYING IT ON' was the title of the farce which opened the programme. It is by that well-known clever actor Mr. William Brough, and though by no means new to this stage, it was doubtless now to many present. Mr. C. H. P. Hay, as 'Walkingham Potts,' (with two o's, 26 years of age and an income of £2000 a year) was a shining light in the performance. His part unquestionably gave him great scope for the display of his ability, and he was not slow to take advantage of the opportunity. His agitation was well feigned, and in the Wellington-boot scene he was a particular success. Mr. C. Hudson, I. M. S., made up as Mr. Jobstock, and bore such a striking resemblance to well-known local gentleman that it was remarked from the stalls in a tone of voice that could be heard in every part of the building and evoked an outburst of laughter. As an actor he was not a success, being too nervous. Had he had more to do he probably would have come out better. Mr. Ardon was fairly good as 'Mr. Littlebat,' the simple red-haired lover. Mrs. Cumming undertook the role of Mrs. Jobstock in a manner which showed that she is worthy of greater business. She had perfect control of her voice and her actions, and was far ahead of the other two ladies in the piece. Miss Hutchings as 'Fanny' and Mrs. Hawkins as 'Lucy' (the maid) were both nervous. The piece was, as is always the case with the A. D. C., admirably put on, and the making up was very effective. When the curtain went up after the interval, the audience was introduced to a sylvan glade with about a score of 'darkies and darlings' grouped prettily in the centre. Old Deacon Jawbones (Mr. John Hays) came strutting in and set the fun in motion with some lively patter. Mrs. Brewitt sang 'Lazily Drowsily,' a very pretty song with hummung chorus. The effort was highly appreciated. Mrs. Yeats rendered another favourite coon song, 'Mammy's little pumpkin coloured coons,' and had to respond to a vociferous encore. Mr. Hudson's 'Madame one' was a happy effort, but Mr. W. G. Worcester's 'story which followed, simply brought down the house. 'Kiss me, honey, do' was sung given by Mrs. Hawkins. This lady, as she called for the Chorus, did a sort of cake walk from side to side of the platform which created much amusement. She was heartily cheered. Mr. Worcester's rendering of 'Just because she made dem goo goo eyes' was hailed with rounds of applause, the audience insisting on his re-appearance. His step-dance was very well executed. Mr. Wolfe gave 'My girl is a high-born lady,' and this was followed by a charming skirt-dance by the Misses P. and M. Seth. Exquisitely attired in glistening skirts (one of gold and the other of silver, caught up with coloured ribbons), they made a lovely picture under the pale lime-light. Their dancing was as nicely performed as their costumes were pretty, and the audience simply roared for more. They returned and bowed their acknowledgments retired, but this would not do and the dances had to be repeated. This item was the most attractive in an attractive programme. Just at this stage a corpulent individual strolled on to the platform, attired in cricket costume with bat in hand and pads on his legs. The get-up was an exaggerated picture of a member of the Shanghai team and was greeted with much laughter. The way in which this individual played on the names of different premiers men on the field caused much merriment. Mrs. Yeats brought a highly successful and most enjoyable entertainment to close with 'Good night' one of the prettiest of songs well sung. The band of the Royal Welsh Fusiliers was present and contributed in no small degree to the enjoyment of all present. Mr. Guipert, the stage manager, and Mr. H. W. Bird, the Hon. Secretary of the A. D. C., had to be congratulated on the result of their efforts. It may be mentioned that the picture on the face of the programme is from the pen of Mr. H. A. Courtney, a member of the chorus.

SHANGHAI V. STRAITS.

Overnight, the scores in this match were—Straits, 105 and 231; Shanghai, 227 and 25 for no wickets. The match opened in favourable weather, before a fairly large turn out of spectators, who were treated to some interesting cricket with an exciting finish. As a matter of fact, though the match resulted in a win for Shanghai, it should have been recorded a tie, as will be seen from the details published below.

Billings opened the bowling to Lanning and sent down a maiden, the wicket kicking awkwardly. Mackenzie was the other bowler, and McEuen got him away to leg for a single. Billings sent down another maiden, beating McEuen once, when the wicket-keeper let the ball go for 2 byes. Another 2-byes at the other end brought up 30, and then Lanning had an unexpected chance at the wicket of Mackenzie, as the wicket at the City Hall bat was bumping badly. Youts struck well back to McEuen, who got him again on the shoulder. The first really good stroke was made by Lanning, who got Mackenzie just third-man for 4 and then to leg for the like. McEuen had a dangerous over from Billings to negotiate, but he jumped out to the last ball and drove it to the screen for 4. Lanning was next hit by Mackenzie and two balls later Youts was hit on the breast by the same bowler. Matters were not improved for the batsmen by the clouds of smoke blowing across the ground from the Naval Yard Extension works. Lanning placed Billings nicely to leg for 3. In Mackenzie's next over, however, a bumping ball got up off the handle of his bat, and, running well up the pitch, Mackenzie took the catch, 48—1—26. Capt. Rose came in and slipped Mackenzie luckily for 4. This was his only effort, for he was caught beautifully at square leg by Whitley, and the regular read—02—2—4. Capt. Price, who had done so well in the first innings, was the newcomer. McEuen added 2 for a well placed cut, and then drove Billings nicely out of the ground. McEuen was succeeded by Whittley at fine slip of Mackenzie, and with three of the less Shanghai wickets down for 59, the chances of the Straits team were improved considerably. The retiring batsman had played good cricket on a tricky wicket for 25 runs. Turnbill joined Price, and a 2-hyo brought up 60. Price cut Billings prettily past Barkshire, but Whitley soon struck the boundary, and only 2 were run. Youts was now standing back to both bowlers, and the field was rearranged to keep down runs. Turnbill got a 'blob' opposite his name, Mackenzie bringing off another very fine catch off his own bowling. 63—4—0. The Shanghai captain now went to the wicket, and took the last ball of the over. Farbridge put up a delivery from Mackenzie, at point, but Barkshire failed to get to it. A very short single was then run for a log snick and Price scored a single of the same over. The Straits team was fielding exceedingly well, and runs were difficult to get. Off Billings' first delivery in the following over Price was smartly caught by Barkshire at point, and the record now read: 67—5—7. Potter joined his captain, who might have been run out on a later ball, but Whitley got to a leg out a little more smartly. Potter drove Billings for a 'couple' and then for a quater. A single was stolen off Mackenzie's bowling, and then Potter sent him to the broad field for 3. Farbridge had a lucky nick for 3 of Billings, and Youts caught him 37—6—10. Twenty-three runs were now required to win when Mackie came in. A very confident appeal was made for a catch at the wicket off the first ball he played, but the batsman survived the appeal. Farbridge sliced Mackenzie to square leg for 3 of Billings, and then drove him off the last ball, wall for 4. The first ball from Billings bumped over Potter's head and was caught by Whittley at slip. The next ball also bumped, the batsman just touching it, and Youts caught him 38—6—11. Seven runs were still required to win when Mackie came in. A very confident appeal was made for a catch at the wicket off the first ball he played, but the batsman survived the appeal. Farbridge sliced Mackenzie to square leg for 3 of Billings, and then drove him off the last ball, wall for 4. The first ball from Billings bumped over Potter's head and was caught by Whittley at slip. The next ball also bumped, the batsman just touching it, and Youts caught him 38—6—11. Seven runs were still required to win, but the batsmen were taking no risks. With the score standing at 103, Stanton had clean bowled by Mackenzie, and made way for V. H. Lanning. The youngster played the remainder of Mackenzie's over very confidently. Mann drove Billings for a single, and then a by was taken for a single. Seven runs were still required to win, but the batsmen were taking no risks. With the score standing at 103, Stanton had clean bowled by Mackenzie, and made way for V. H. Lanning.
